Macron: France is ready to discuss the deployment of nuclear-armed aircraft in the EU

French President Emmanuel Macron said that Paris would discuss initiatives to deploy nuclear-armed aircraft in the European Union. He said this in an interview with TF1 TV channel.

Macron also reiterated that the French President, the Commander-in-Chief, will always have the last word on this issue.

"In the coming weeks and months, I will determine the parameters for discussions on the deployment of nuclear-armed aircraft outside France in other EU countries," he stressed.

Earlier, Macron said he had decided to start a discussion about using the country's nuclear weapons to protect the entire European Union. He stressed that France has a special status in European defense, assuring that in any case, the decision regarding nuclear deterrence "has always been and will always be in the hands of the president."
